CUBAN CIGARS, COMPARED ACROSS EUROPE

PUBLISHED FROM SWEDEN

An independent paper on Cuban cigars, with a price board the reader actually uses.

thenextcigar.com is a broadsheet-style publication: a magazine of long reads, a members' room, a small accessories shop, and the Markets board — box prices for 52 Cuban vitolas read from retailers' own pages, dated, with history. It sells no tobacco. It ranks nobody for money.

Fewer Cigars, Costlier Cigars: Where Habanos Goes From Here

Cuba exported about 50 million cigars in 2024, against 94 million in 2018. The festival is cancelled, the grid has collapsed six times this year, and a Siglo VI costs 178 per cent more than it did in 2022. This is what the numbers actually say about the next few years — and what they don't.

Live price for the box of 25 in the retailer's own currency, their own tax included. A box crossing a border picks up destination duty and VAT on top — the "stay paid EU" mark shows the few retailers whose price is all-in beyond their home market.

What the paper will not do

AND WHY IT MATTERS TO A RETAILER

It does not sell tobacco. It does not invent reviews or awards. It does not move anyone up the board — a price ranks where the number puts it, and that is why readers trust the number when it points to EGM. Anything paid is labelled and sits beside the board, never inside it.
